

Giuseppe Labriola

Giuseppe has 20 years of nursing and midwifery experience and has undertaken a variety of clinical roles in both hospital and community midwifery. Whilst working at Chelsea and Westminster Hospital, Giuseppe developed an ‘e-midwife’ service – a virtual social media network to improve women’s experiences of communication, access and understanding of maternity services. This was then rolled out across four hospitals in south-east London.

He has held Head of Midwifery posts at United Lincolnshire Hospitals NHS Trust and Lewisham and Greenwich NHS Trust. Giuseppe’s most recent role was at Barts Health NHS Trust as the associate director of nursing and midwifery. He is currently at The Princess Alexandra Hospital NHS Trust as the Trust’s first Director of Midwifery.

Giuseppe is passionate about midwifery and family centred care. An advocate for women and the nursing midwifery & profession, Giuseppe is chair of the RCM board and is a 2019 FNF Scholar.
