

Helen Bosley

Helen is both a registered general and children's nurse and has worked in intensive care units abroad and throughout the UK, before specialising in infection prevention and control.

Since 2002 Helen has worked as an infection prevention and control (IPC) specialist nurse initially in an acute Trust and latterly as a Nurse Consultant and head of IPC in a large combined community and mental health Foundation Trust, providing services across three counties. Her interests are broadly antimicrobial resistance, education, and developing effective collaborative partnerships across health economies to improve patients' outcomes.

Helen completed a FNF travel scholarship in 2019 and her PHD in January 2022 at Oxford Brookes University. Her thesis was titled: Understanding Maternal Attitudes to Antibiotic Use: A Community Based Case Study.
