

Major Michael Collins

PSB – Clearly this will change next Jan when I formally leave the Army.

Mike Collins is an experienced Emergency Nursing Officer, having served with the British Army in the ED, PHC and Pre-hospital environment in Iraq and Afghanistan. Currently working in governance, assurance and project management in the innovation and implementation space, he recently completed an MSc in Occupational Psychology, and has a particular interest in Professional Identity, Human Factors, and the role of leadership in healthcare. At present he is studying for a Professional Doctorate in Nursing, further examining how military Nurses regardless of speciality form their professional identity, taking a view that the key to moving healthcare forward is the language we as professionals use within our teams, fundamentally empowering nurses to stand and be counted as the professionals they are.

Many Thanks and Kind Regards

Mike